

Our INSET sessions focusing on Adaptive Teaching on September 2nd are free/included in your membership. The morning session is for TAs and the afternoon is for Teachers – please book as many places as you like.

Adaptive teaching isn't about lowering expectations or creating endless variations of worksheets; it's about providing the right support at the right moment so every child can thrive. Because teachers and teaching assistants play distinct, vital roles in making this happen, we are hosting two tailored sessions.

This online session focuses on the vital role Teaching Assistants play in adaptive teaching to ensure all pupils achieve their best. We will move beyond simply 'helping' to using scaffolding and modelling that builds pupil independence over time.

You will learn how to use high-quality interactions to identify gaps in understanding and provide the 'just- right' amount of support. We will explore how your observations contribute to the 'graduated approach' – assess, plan, do, and review – helping to remove barriers for pupils with SEND or those from disadvantaged backgrounds. The goal is ensuring pupils don't just complete tasks, but truly secure foundational knowledge for long-term success.

Adaptive teaching is not about creating different worksheets or reducing expectations. It is about every pupil – across the primary phase – accessing the same ambitious curriculum, with the right support at the right moment.

At the heart of this session is a practical toolkit – phase-specific strategies and adaptations from Early Years through to upper Key Stage 2 – that you can open on Monday morning and use straight away. It is rooted in inclusion – the belief that adaptive teaching, done well, is simply what great teaching looks like for every child.
